The first story has stone column between the wooden French doors, and a stone header between the first and second story. The sides, back and façade on the second, third and fourth floor are all brick. The brick on the façade is painted, but the brick on the interior is the typical red brick of the New Orleans area. The interior is largely a shell of a building. The stairs run along the right wall, and are terribly narrow. The elevator is obviously not original, and currently blocks the far right window. The windows in the front and back appear to be original, wooden, multi pane, tall windows. The rehabilitation of the property will entail a change of use from vacant and blighted to a 5 residential units and 1 retail unit building.
